Consolidation of Baptist Newspapers.

The two leading Baptist newspapers in this city, The Examiner and The Chronicle, are this week consolidated into one journal, which starts with a circulation exceeded by that of but one religious paper in the country, and far outrunning that of any other of its own denominational cotemporaries throughout the world. The combined paper is called The Examiner and Chronicle, and is owned by the proprietors of the separate papers.

The Rev. Dr. Church, who has for many years conducted The Chronicle, and who is widely known in his own and other denominations as a writer of ability, has improved the occasion of the consolidation of the two papers to retire from active editorial duties with which he has been so long familiar; but he continues as one.
